

Finding the "One"

Finding that thing called "one true love" is something that many people fuss about. In fact, a lot of money has been made and continues to be made because of this hunt. Dating-related businesses are everywhere, both in cyberspace and in the physical world.

When we talk about true love, it is inevitable that we touch the subject of soul mates. It is said that we have a soul mate and we just have to find him or her, and we'll live happily ever after. But that is too fairy tale-ish.

There are many soul mate-related theories from different cultures of the world. In one such theory, in Plato's The Symposium, it is said that long ago people have four arms and legs, two faces and two sex organs. These humans can either be male and male, female and female, or male and female. Because they were powerful, these humans became arrogant and the gods got mad. Hence, Zeus split them into two, making them less powerful. Since then, people search for their other half -- their soul mate. Some say a soul mate doesn't have to be a husband or wife; a soul mate can also be a best friend or a sibling or a mentor.

People often create an ideal man or woman while searching for the one destined for them. They have specific "requirements," like s/he be good looking, attractive, responsible, brainy, with good paying job, or someone with a nice family. These requirements often derail us from seeing the perfect person for us.

There is no such thing as a perfect man or woman, or a perfect relationship. There is only the fact that there are two persons, who are perfect for each other. So, instead of finding your ideal mate, try finding someone, who complements your personality. Don't get blinded by material things or financial stability, choose someone that will happily help you grow into your full potential.

After your long search is over, it's time to tie the knot. The wedding ceremony is one of the couple's happiest moments; so, make sure to plan it carefully and ahead of time. It would be great if the wedding will take place at a location that both of you enjoy.
